

EDITORIAL

"As a general rule, the most successful man in life is the man who has the best information"

It gives me immense pleasure to note that the Dental journal of Advance Studies has successfully completed its first year of publication with flying colors. There is no greater happiness to the publishers than learning of the enthusiastic response that the publication is receiving from the readers. This journal is still in its infancy but the overwhelming response it is getting from the readers and contributors is really very encouraging for us. The testimony to its popularity can be gauged from the fact that the journal is being accessed by readers not only from India but abroad as well. Recently, I got an email from a dental student in Iran, having query regarding an article. It is certainly quite satisfying to receive encouraging response from our readers. We are in the process of evolution of this journal and we need a wider circle of academicians to send in their response on the articles published to evaluate ourselves on the work that we do.

It has been our relentless effort to publish the best and in this respect we sincerely request the contributors to kindly send us articles of quality and substance that address a wide spectrum of dental issues. The journal assumes more significance than before after getting the status of the official publication of the Himachal Pradesh University, Shimla. With this comes a greater sense of responsibility on publishers as far as the quality of articles being published is concerned.

I must thank all our readers and contributors for the patronage we are receiving from their end. Every issue of this journal is a collective effort by the editorial board of this journal. But one name that outshines all of us in this effort is the young, hardworking and very sincere co-editor of this journal Dr. Varun Jindal. He deserves all the Kudos for his sincere efforts. Keep it up..... Varun.
